THE HUGH H. SMITH, M.D., COLLECTION
IN THE COLLEGE OF MEDICINE LIBRARY
OF THE UNIVERSITY OF ARIZONA

January 1970
TUCSON, ARIZONA
The following medical books were given to the University of Arizona Library in 1958 by Hugh H. Smith, M.D., Research Professor of Microbiology and Medical Technology. The collection was transferred to the College of Medicine Library in the summer of 1969. The University of Arizona Library's Department of Special Collections published a selected, carefully annotated list of items from this collection in September 1958, prepared by Miss Phyllis Ball, and this present publication is not intended to supersede that detailed work. Rather it is an unannotated list of books from Dr. Smith's collection which have been added to the College of Medicine Library.

The works date from the 17th to the 20th century and include such classics as a 1625 Celsus De re medica, a 1627 Hippocrates Aphorismi, a 1695 Sydenham Praxis medica experimentalis, and a 1765 Fracastoro Della sifilide. Eighteenth and 19th century works are rich in representation of medical progress in Scotland, England, and America. Twentieth century works show Dr. Smith's continuing interest in both history and public health, and include such items as Welch's Papers and addresses (1920), Blogg's Bibliography of Osler's writings (1921), and Viswanathan's The conquest of malaria in India (1958). Because of their value many of the items are housed in the Library's History Room and may be used there. Some of these books do not circulate at all, and others may circulate only with the Librarian's permission.

The College of Medicine Library is grateful to be the recipient of Dr. Smith's fine collection, which reflects his lifelong interest in the history of medicine, public health, and tropical diseases both as a physician and a bookman. The Library is also grateful for this first significant addition to its collections of materials in the history of medicine.
